ABOUT PRIVATE AND OFFICIAL MASTER'S DEGREES

The Master's Degrees that are part of the PAEC Universidad Europea-OAS scholarship program are both official and private master's degrees. The following section explains what these two types of master's degrees are.

In Spain, universities offer two types of master's degrees: official master's degrees and their own master's degrees, also called private degrees. The official master's degrees have the endorsement of the university that grants them and additionally have the recognition of the State. These studies are subjected to a complete evaluation process that guarantees their quality and that allows their inclusion in the Register of Universities, Centers and Degrees (RUCT) of Spain. Official master's degrees are regulated by the National Agency for Quality Assessment and Accreditation (ANECA).

In general, official qualifications are more likely to be recognized by ministries of education or bodies responsible for the recognition and validation of foreign titles. Each country has its regulation related to the recognition of foreign degrees that can be found out directly at the local ministry of education.

On the other hand, private degrees are endorsed by the prestige of the university or the training center that grants them and are aimed at contributing to the development of the professional career of the students because they are very aligned with the current market demand. There are many companies that do not take into consideration whether the degree is official or private, or if it is recognized locally when hiring a professional; it is more relevant that the prestige of the program and that the profile of the candidate meet the skills that are required for the position.

In any case, the advisor of the Universidad Europea that supports each candidate through the admission process may provide you with information or guidance about the different types of Master's Degree and the possibilities of validation or local recognition.
